Swing Voters: Key To Sunday's Debate

Mondale Aims at Narrow Audience Of Undecideds, Shaky Reagan Votes

By Howell Raines New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — By most estimates, more than 80 million people will witness the presidential debate on television and radio Sunday. But Walter F. Mondale will be aiming at a fraction of that audience, as many as 15 million voters who can conceivably be lured out of the undecided column or talked into switching their votes from President Ronald Reagan. Poll takers call these voters "po-tential switchers" and estimate that they make up only 15 percent to 20 percent of the 85 million people expected to vote Nov. 6. If, as the Democrats hope, 100 million of the ration's 173 million registered voters actually turn out, this pool of "switchers" will be expanded.

Rate of Growth Slows Sharply in U.S. Economy

By Jane Seaberry Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The rapid pace of the U.S. economic expansion slowed sharply during the third quarter, with the gross na-tional product increasing at a 2.7percent annual rate, less than half the rate of the first half of the year. the Commerce Department reported Friday.

Although economists said the sharp reduction in growth did oot signal a recession, it did indicate that the economy may be headed for a "growth recession" in which growth is too slow to create the occessary ournber of jobs to prevent unemployment from rising. Economists said that a rate of growth of 3 to 3.5 percent is needed to create enough new jobs.

The growth in output of goods and services fell from the 7.1-percent rate in the second quarter largely because of the continued poor showing in trade and a susnained pause in consumer spending over the summer. The third quarter's growth rate is the slowest since the final quarter of 1982, when the GNP expanded at a 0.5-percent annual rate.

In terms of inflation-adjusted dollars, the Commerce Department report said that the GNP in the third quarter rose $10.5 hillion, to an adjusted annual rate of SI.65

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said Friday that the eco-nomic slowdown "is already behind us" and that growth should pick up later this year and continue into 1985. Consumer spending picked up last month after a full this summer, consumer confidence is high and incomes are rising. Mr. Baldrige said. Consumer spending accounts not a growth recession. Lawrence Chimerine, chief economist for Chase Econometrics, said, "It's clear that while we all thought the third quarter would be slow it's definitely slowing more sharply than I thought."

"The key is whether this is just a full and the economy will continue to grow at very low rates" or an outright recession will occur, Mr. Chimerine said. "As loog as we have these deficits and trade deficits there will be no good growth on a sustainable basis.

Economists blamed the sharp slowdown in the economy on the large federal hudget deficits, which keep interest rates abnormally high and tend to reduce purchases of homes and goods such as large household appliances,

Economists also said the success of the economic expansion in the United States and the larger in comes it generated have caused consumers to purchase more imported goods. The trade deficit during the third quarter grew from SI 1.4 billion to $22.7 billion, the Commerce Department has reported.

nal Herald Tribune BERN — A decision by the Swiss government to send back to Sri Lanka 1,700 Tamils seeking asylum here has provoked protests from refugee workers and human rights groups and raised fears among Tamils that other European governments might follow Switzer-land's example.

An estimated 30,000 Tamils fled in Europe following an outbreak of communal violence in Sri Lanka in July of last year, and the Swiss decision was the first to officially jeopardize their status. The Swiss move was announced recently by the outgoing minister of justice, Rudolf Friedrich, after two senior officials in his ministry, Peter Hess and Urs Hadorn, spent eight days in Sri Lanka in August. The two officials reported that in Sir Lanka "security forces and in particular the army have oot al-ways been under cootrol." Given this, they said, the 1,700 seekers of asylum in Switzerland could be sent bances in Bern.

On Jan. 10, the UN High Commisioner for Refugees asked European governments to suspend repatriatioo of Tamils until the situation in Sri Lanka was clarified. Diplomats said that the commissioner renewed the appeal oo May I and that until the Swiss decision, Western governments appeared to be respecting it. Although Mr. Friedrich explained that no Tamil would be sent back until his individual request for asylum had been considered, several oewspapers ooted that only one Tamil had been granted refugee status in Switzerland and

In New York, amhassadors of the Contadora countries submitted a draft resolution to the United Nations General Assembly on Fri-day calling on the Central American countries to complete negotia-oons on a peace treaty.

The resolution asks the countries to "accelerate their consultations with the Contadora group to complete negotiations" and urges them to promptly put into force "the mechanisms for execution and application of the treaty articles."

The resolution also asks all other states, particularly those "with connections and interests in the area." to respect the proposed Act for Peace and Cooperation in Central America by signing a separate pro-tocol attached to the act.

The nations considered to have special interest include the United States, Cuba and the Soviet Union. France has declared its willingness to sign such a protocol.

Sandinists Assail Meeting John Lantigua of The Washington Post reported earlier from Mana-

Nicaraguan officials called the Tegucigalpa meeting a U.S.-in-spired attempt to undermine the Contadora peace negotiations. Sandinist officials said that re-could delay signing of an accord and perhaps bring the collapse of the effort. The Sandinists accused the United States of trying to undercut the Contadora treaty because it would result in the end of the U.S. military presence in Central America. This is a Latin American solution to a Latin American problem and the United States just won't buy that," said Alejandro Bendana, first secretary of the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry.

The foreign ministers of the Contadora countries said this past week in Madrid that they would accept changes in the draft, but not ones that seriously affect the balance of interests struck in the document. Sandinist officials have said they will discuss changes only if other Central American countries insist. Honduras has published a list of 12 adjustments it would make in the Contadora draft. These include a stipulation that limits be set by the draft on the size of armies and the quantity of arms belonging to each country. The present draft calls for a commission from disinterested countries to set those limits after the signing.

The Sandinists say they favor the current draft because it calls for an end to attacks by U.S.-funded rebels against their government. They also say they will not know what level of armament they will need until they are sure those at-tacks have ended. There is no guarantee that the United States will adhere to the Contadora agreement," Mr. Bendana said.

Other observers say there are assons to make changes. "It is true that nobody ever expected the San-dinists to sign it, and that no one was very careful about what actually went into it," said a Western diplomat. "That was a mistake."

U.S. officials have said the draft proposal lacks effective mechanisms to verify compliance with provisions that require a reduction of arms and military advisers and an end to clandestine arms traffic.

Mondale Puts Space-War Scenario on TV

By Dudley Clendinen

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — In a 30-second commercial shown Thursday night on prime-time television, the Mondale-Ferraro campaign unveiled one issue by which it hopes to dominate the presidential debate Sonday night and the rest of the campaign, the administration proposal to put a weapons system in

The departure in emphasis for the Mondale camp is a calculated samble intended to charge the remaining weeks of campaigning with the force of a life-or-death proposition and to give the voters a striking example of the difference in outlook between Walter F. Mon-

"We want to raise the stakes even further in the election and in charge of media strategy.

There have been hints of this race in Mr. Mondale's radio speech last Sunday and in the pronounce-ments of his running mate, Repre-sentative Geraldine A. Ferraro. "If you have any doubt about where Walter Mondale and Ronald Reagan stand on the issues of war and peace, watch the debate Sun-day night," she told audiences Wednesday, "Your future may de-pend on it."

But in an age of video games, computers and the high technology associated with the television screen, the Mondale campaign chose to introduce the issue, with all its implications, with the graphic medium of three television commerciale. The theme of the commercial Thursday night was in contrast to the five-minute Reagan commercial that appeared all week, in which Mr. Reagan, seated in the Oval Office, talks about the various ways in which "good things are happening."

"We're reaching toward new frontiers of science, technology and space," Mr. Reagan says. "Stu-dents are doing better in school. Crime is down, our people are more united and America is at peace."

The Mondale commercial paints York: a starker picture. "Ronald Reagan is determined to put killer weapons in space," it says. "The Soviets will have to match us, and the arms race time to wake a president. Computers will take control. On Nov. 6, you can take control. No weapons in space by either side. Draw the line at the heavens, with Mondale."

The impact of the commercial lies in the graphic effects that accompany the words. Produced by Roy Spence, a media consultant, it begins with a view of Earth as seen from a satellite. As the camera backs up, the viewer realizes that the image is appearing on a televi-sion monitor in the middle of a war room, a place of computer screens and buttons, with oo bumans.

In the foreground is a red telephone. Its lines blink and go unanswered. Its alarm buzzer sounds. The computer system begins to flash the graphics of a program set into relentless motion, and only when the voice suggests that the viewer "can take control" does the system stop.

in comparison with the Reagan commercials, which Reagan-Bush campaign officials said were planned long ago, the Moodale commercial is an attempt to charge the atmosphere of the debate with one paramount issue.

In Mr. Reagan's main commercial, the emphasis is on national well-being and domestic economic health, with Mr. Resgan in the role of spiritual leader. Mr. Mondale, my opponent," is portrayed as a ghm spirit, committed to more tax-

"He sees America divided by envy," Mt. Rengan says. "We see America inspired and uniting for opportunity. If we stick together, we'll keep building something new and much better — a renewed American spirit with a future of shirring opportunities our children can cherisb forever."

The Mondale strategy, which aides said evolved in discussions of how to forge one issue that would clearly differentiate the two candidacies in the last phase of the campaign, is intended to pierce that Reagan aura of well-being.

Command Accountability

Secretary of State George Shultz said on Oct, 12 that the State Department's chain of command in security matters has to be tightened: "We really have to emphasize it and see that decisions are made and carried out." His determination seemed all the more warranted in the grisly light of the bombing earlier that Friday in Brighton, where Britain's Conservative Party was in conference. One questioo involves competence: giving the right orders and having them carried out. At Brighton, according to newspapermen and conference participants, police were lax about checking passes and controlling access to the Grand Hotel. If the bomb had been planted some time before, as police suspect, checking passes at the donr would have made oo difference. But the laxity indicates a casual approach at a time when warnings of a new IRA attack had apparently been in police hands for several days. In Lebanon, security was clearly incompetent in the bombings of the U.S. Embassy in April 1983, of the U.S. Marine barracks last October and of the embassy annex last month. Whatever the orders and the precautions were, they were insufficient to stop a predictable and repeated form of attack.

The second question concerns accountability: No one seems to have paid a price for the Beirut failures. Mr. Reagan said he assumed responsibility for those security lapses. Admirable as this may be as a sentiment, the practical meaning is that no one is held accountable. Mr. Reagan undoubtedly meant his statement - which he repeated, in substance, in his first campaign debate with Walter Mondale - as a gesture of confidence in the military services and the State Department's security office. But its effect has to be demoralizing, since good performance and bad are amiably pnt on the same level. We would like to see the issue come up again in the second debate this Sunday. Is Mr. Reagan to be held accountable for lack of toughness at a time when toughness would have meant better security?

It used to be the rule in the American military services that there was no excuse for failure. Many injustices were undoubtedly done to officers who failed for reasons they could oot possibly have controlled. Records were permanently marked; careers were blighted. But a crucial principle was maintained: that of command accountability.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE

Beirut Before Grenada

The Reagan administration is pulling out all the stops for the first anniversary oext Thurs-day of the Grenada intervention. Thousands of fully equipped U.S. military men took a few days to overwhelm a few hundred underarmed defenders. The action is being hailed as the greatest triumph since V-J day. Upoo this modest operation is being piled a geopolitical weight that would crush the Normandy landing. The event is said to mark a momentous turning point: The United States set aside years of irresolution, showed its regained steel and will and successfully conducted the first reversal of a Communist takeover in history.

To which we say: Enough, fellows, The threat to the safety of the American medical students and the apprehensions and appeals of Grenada's neighbors justified the intervention. although it tonk some weeks for good evidence to come that this was so. Since then documents have been discovered indicating that Grenada's revolutionaries - both winners and losers of the bloody power struggle that precipitated the invasion —had pervasive Communist ties.

All the same, a little perspective is in order. The special circumstances of the Grenada intervention - the crisis in the regime, the island's great vulnerability, the democratic cast of its oeighbors, the presence of American students - limit its general significance. A prudent administration would not be pounding the drums if it had something more impressive to show. Besides, Grenada, although liberated, is far from out of the woods.

By pounding the drums, Reaganites stir suspicions that they seek to draw attention from another event whose first anniversary is taking place. Last Oct. 23, just two days before Gre-nada, terrorists hombed the U.S. Marine barracks in Beirut in the second but unfortunately not final attack on a U.S. facility there.

The political magnetism that attracts the Reagan administration to Grenada repels it from Lebanon, scene of a successioo of military disasters and a parallel series of political frustrations. These include the failure, after helping remove most PLO forces, to ensure the safety of Palestinian civilians, the failure to put Lebanon back together again, the failure to make the Israeli withdrawal agreement stick and the failure to pry out the Syrians.

We continue to think that the Reagan administration had good inidal reason - to protect civilians, to steady the Lebanese - for putting marines ashore in Lebanon. But there is no denying, unless you are working directly for the president's re-election, that the results were hitter. To laud a relatively easy, successful intervention and black out a heartbreak intervection is to distort reality and to miss learning the lessons that must be drawn.

-THE WASHINGTON POST.

Chernenko in Sunday's second Reagan-Mondale debate. Hard though it is on journalists, the truth is that the Soviet leader had oothing new or important to say in his interview with The Washington Post (IHT, Oct. 17). How could he have, just 12 days after his foreign minister lunched at the White House? If there was any ceed to amend Mr. Gromyko's remarks, or to respond to a private Reagan inquiry, it would have been done in private. No, the interview's object was oot diplomacy hut politics - Soviet and American. The Post made a useful cootribution just hy getting to see Mr. Chernenko. The interview shows that he remains in good enough health to hold himself ont as the Kremlin's principal spokesman. However great the struggle among his potential successors, they remain eager to speak with his single voice. In form and tone, the interview was meant to reiterate that oo succession struggle or personal ailments keep the Russians from the bargaining table only Mr. Reagan would accept one or more of their conditions as proof of his earnest.

Mr. Chernenko again mentioned demilitarizing space, a ouclear freeze, a pledge of no first use and an end to all ouclear tests. The Reagan administration objects to each, with reasons of varying quality, but that is no reason to help the Soviet leader achieve his secood objective - to make his agenda a centerpiece of the Reagan-Mondale debate.

How nice for the Kremlin and how fonlish of the candidates if they were to lapse into a competition over who could make more of this latest Soviet "offer." Americans at this moment should not be debating what the Ruscombination of weapons and negotiated restraints on weapons will best serve American security in the coming years. If the superpowers are truly ready to abandon shrill and public disputations, a good place to prove it now is at the Standing Consultative Commission, which they created to monitor bast arms control agreements. In recent years both countries have placed a heavy burden on this channel: Washington with wholesale public charges of violatious, most recently on Oct. 10; Moscow with some implausible responses. The most serious current American complaint concerns a new radar being installed near the city of Krasnoyarsk. Whatever its mission, the radar appears suitable for a forbidden purpose: defending against American missiles. As disturbing as the radar itself is the Russians' explanation (Oh, it's only for tracking objects in space), which they knew would not be believed.

This commission process is important beyond its technical success in resolving disputes. It has kept each side talking about the purpose and structure of nuclear arsenals. It is especially worth preserving while other channels are closed. For two years the Reagan administration forbade its negotiators to raise any disputes arising under the SALT-2 treaty. which it refused to have ratified, for fear of acknowledging it as binding. Mr. Reagan has assured Congress that he is actively pursuing confidential talks in the commission. There is no future for arms control unless be does, and unless Mr. Chernenko honors that forum by responding more credibly than before.

Italy and Hungary are the only countries to which the thinly-veiled charge in the communiqué could have referred. It was announced that after examining the Marseilles assassination the councils of the two Ententes have "come to the conclusion that it is a question of a crime which, having been committed under the influence of forces working beyond the frontiers, comes within the sphere of foreign policy. # Another Nobel Prize for Hope and Against Hatred

PARIS — This year the Nobel Committee has reaffirmed a broad, humanist definition of ace. By awarding its Peace Prize to South Africa's Bishop Desmond Tutu, the committee has not only honored and encouraged nonviolent struggle against apartheid, it has also implicitly proclaimed that peace is out submission.

Peace is not paralysis. It is not resignation, haggles between nations for mutual advantage. statesmen flying around the world making pompous and well publicized speeches. It is dedication to the cause of the downtrodden without killing without trampling. Bishop Tutu said it clearly and firmly. "We are struggling not to oppress some-body else but in order to free everybody." And be told his compatriots, "Be nice to whites, they need to the compatriots, but the business it." you to rediscover their humanity." For the cause of peace is indeed the cause of humanity and hope.

This is not the first time that the Nobel Peace Prize has been used to make the point, although on several occasions the committee lowered its vision to a narrower, more legalistic idea of peace as a piece of paper signed amid fanfare.

Last year's award to Lech Walesa of Poland, harassed leader of the outlawed Solidarity union, was in the same spirit as Bishop Tutu's prize. So were the Peace Prize awards to Mairead Corrigan and Betty Williams of Northern Ireland in 1976, and to the leader of the African National Coo-gress, Albert Luthuli, in 1960.

Just to recall the names makes evident that recognition is not a promise. In the 24 years since the Luthuli prize apartheid has been reinforced to the point of mass removal of people from their homes. The African National Congress, banned and driven underground, has turned to violence. In the seven years since the Irish women were honored, their movement for reconciliation has evaporated and hundreds more have been murdered in Ulster's archaic civil war.

These are measures of the distance between noble aspirations and everyday realities in today's world. But yearnings for something better are real. too, and do not disappear. It is to the committee's credit that it continues to remind us of how far there is to go, and of the effort needed.

The record is not all hleak. Twenty years ago the prize went to another black preacher struggling for the rights of his people and the dignity that his country could oot achieve without granting them. That was Martin Luther King Jr., struck down by an assassin's bullet four years later. His crusade is not completed, but the advances of a single generation show how much was won. People can change.

The special appeal of Bishop Tutu is his warm good cheer. He has a quick wit and a hearty laugh. He lives in a pleasant but modest house in the disgraceful township of Soweto, the carefully con-trolled apart-place for blacks who work in the earning skyscrapers and luxurious villas of Johannesburg. Most of Soweto's streets are unpaved. The shops are small, with minimal stocks of food and fuel. People could not hold out for long there. But when Bishop Tutu conducts the service at a local church, the singing is joyous and the spirits rise. His people are oppressed but oot degraded. It is part of South Africa's strange surrealism that the Christian faith, which inspires his sense of lively, universal humaniry, is also advanced as the foundation of apartheid by the country's Dutch Reformed Church, which claims that the Bible orders separation of races. It takes more than a text to bring goodwill to men.

But Bishop Tutu is an example and a symbol that goodwill continues to exist, even or perhaps particularly in the worst circumstances. He warns that it may be disappearing among his compatri-ots, along with their fading hopes that the system imposed on them can be peacefully changed. Last month some 80 blacks were killed in demonstrations. One white baby died when a stone was hurled through the window of a car.

Violence for the sake of exercising power over others and violence in an explosion of angry frus-tration are uniquely human gestures. They are matched, though, by the special human awareness of the value of peace and goodwill.

The Nobel Committee has done well to honor the forces of hope against hatred.

Civilian Conscription for Europe's Unemployed? mists claim that a 10-percent cut in

time not come to look once again at some form of civilian conscription? It may be the only way that Western Europe can defuse the ticking time bomh of social unrest that is threatened by high youth unemployment.

Few European experts now doubt that there is a "lost generation" of workless youth, the less adequate of whom may never find employment. The statistics tell a sorry tale of 40 percent of the European Community's 12.5 million reg-istered unemployed being under 25 leaver in three being denied a joh.

These statistics probably disguise an even worse situation in which young people make up more than half the 15-to-18 million EC citizens who, it is estimated, would work if only they could. An angry, fright-ened and largely unskilled under-class of frustrated jobseekers is being alienated from society. The need to stop these disadvantaged young people from becoming a sludge of long-term unemployed at the bottom of the labor pool has moved such widely different cultures as Sweden, Belgium and Malta to try compulsory work programs. Others - France in particular - are perhaps unwittingly approaching the issue of civilian conscription or coercion by closing the previously open-ended benefits payable to the unemployed.

in Britain, a MORI opinion poll reveals that an extraordinary 84 percent of 15-to-24-year-olds would welcome the introduction of voluntary community service as an alternative to the dole queues. Some 41 percent of people of all ages sam-pled thought that such a scheme should now be made compulsory for school-leavers. Somewhat surprisingly, as many as 28 percent of the under-24s agreed with them.

Attitudes across Europe to free or forced community service are con-fused by the patchwork of military conscription systems that exist. Bot these seldom provide the right training framework to combat subsequent unemployment, while civilian schemes can be used to make good the shortcomings in education and training that handicap so much of the ill-fated "baby boom" generation. Even liberal politicians in Europe are therefore beginning to look backward 50 years to such of the New Deal experiments as FDR's enlistment of 250,000 near-destitute young Americans into the Civilian Conservation Corps, the "Tree Army" that created 800 state parks. In 1978, the case for some form of national service was succinctly made by the then U.S. ambassador to Britain, Kingman Brewster. He wrote: "Under-compensated, publicly useful service for all men and women before they enter their lifetime careers might go a long way to breaking the unacceptable lixation which tells us that we cannot afford to rehabilitate our slums, clean up our cities or take care of our open spaces and countryside." Today the image of battalions of enthusiastic young people patching up the torn fabric of our Caring Society - while removing themselves from the unemployment figures -is more attractive than ever. Furthermore there are considerable economic advantages, accordto experts at the Lo of Economics who drew up a detailed conscription plan a few years ago. The cost of unemployment falls, and there is the stimulus of cheap public works programs. For the conscripts themselves (or the volunteers), there is the hope of a real job just around the corner. Sweden has found that those co-opted into municipal "work brigades" improve their chances of securing genume employment later on.

In most European countries. though, the debate over youth unemployment has so far centered on wages. The fashionable argument has been that much lower wages would help Europe emulate Ameri-ca's feat of creating some 12 to 15 million "low-tech, no-tech" jobs since the mid-1970s by pricing young people back into the labor market. Now some British econoreal wages could create 2.5 million oew jobs in Britain, where joblessness is just over 3 million. The wages debate has eclipsed antidotes like conscription, yet it is closely linked to the community service idea in the sense that only the oew civilian "armies" would have the might to defy trade unions who oppose all wage undercutting. The different countries of Europe would be unlikely, however, to adopt similar schemes, while the political reception given to any U.S.-style "workfare" program is hard to it could well be that left-wing liberals and laissez-faire conservatives will wake up to find themselves strange bedfellows thanks to unsuspected advantages in the idea. Enlightened and socially responsible progressives may consider that conscription of all classes and backgrounds is fairer, while right-wingers might reflect that with its potential for scooping up some 3 million school-leavers in the EC it is quicker and more effective than any of the measures currently being used to "demagnetize" the attractions of unemployment benefits. in other words, whether one wants to do something for the unemployed or something about them. the idea of mobilizing the present raggle-taggle army of unemployed is worth thinking about.

IFAD in Crisis: The Search for an Aid Consensus

ONDON — Paris in the coming L week is the venue of an impor-tant but unheralded international conference that could lead either to a new initiative in the stalled North-South dialogue or to a breakdown in communications between industrial-ized and developing countries on tackling global issues.

A meeting of the governing council of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) will be opened on Monday by President François Mitterand, with President Raul Alfonsin of Argentina present. The council usually meets at IFAD's headquarters in Rome. The French president has signaled his commitment to this unique but troubled UN agency by inviting it to Paris.

Unless there is a consensus in Paris on the funding of IFAD, the agency, set up in 1977 to fund food production projects in the world's poorest countries, could cease to exist. It will have been a 10-year wonder

- an instructive story of the ups and downs of multilateral aid diplomacy in the last decade. The agency was conceived at the World Food Conference in Rome in 1974. One of its first and most ardent supporters was Henry Kissinger, then U.S. secretary of state. IFAD became the first international forum in which the rich oilproducing countries exercised their uscle. The United States, particularly, was glad to reach an understanding that OPEC would share the cost of running the new agency. Washington was tired of being the chief paymaster of multilateral organizations. It was keen to lock the oil producers into the aid-giving process. In return IFAD was established on tive control shared equally between industrialized, oil-producing and de-veloping countries. The president or chief executive was to be from OPEC. A Saudi, Abdul Mohsin al-Sudeary, will have served from the start in Rome in 1977 until his retirement at the forthcoming council meeting.

By Andrew Lycett

Although IFAD's initial $1-billioo funding for 1978-1980 was shared roughly between industrialized and oil-producing countries, the small, experimental and thus vulnerable agency soon fell prey to various dip-lomatic gremlins — chiefly an Ameri-can change of heart about commitment to such bodies, on the one hand, and OPEC's division and growing financial problem on the other.

When donors came round to making IFAD's first replenishment (for 1981-1983), differences could not be hidden. The new Reagan administration cut Jimmy Carter's increased pledge of $245 million to $180 million, and then proceeded to appropriate only $40 million by the end of the replenishment term. (The full sum has only this month been voted through, after enabling hodgetary legislation in Congress.) OPEC cut back its commitment so that it was only offering 42 percent of $1.1 billion, and then Iran and Libya failed to make their contributions at all. while other oil producers fell behind.

When the first replenishment ran out in December 1983 there was no agreement for further funding, IFAD had to cease committing money to new projects while negotiations on its financial future proceeded.

The Americans were adamant that In return IFAD was established on a unique tripartite basis, with execu-was no longer "burden sharing" be-tween OECD and OPEC members; IFAD had become less of a funding and more of a project-implementatioo agency, and its staff had grown disproportionately.

OPEC reckoned that it was now experiencing a deficit and could not be expected to match the generosity it had shown at a time of unusual sur-pluses in the mid-1970s. Earlier this month, at the latest in a series of negotiations on the delayed replenishment, OPEC offered $295 million in response to the OECD countries' $465 million. This would mean a drop in IFAD's resources to $760 million, with OPEC's share falling to 38 percent. The United States says this is not true burden sharing and is therefore unacceptable. A compromise may emerge this weekend in time for the governing council meeting. IFAD may have to make do with stopgap funding (for, say, 18 months) until donors decide on long-term positions. Or it may adopt a French proposal that certain OECD countries offer "additionality" payments to top up funds while respecting the burden-sharing ratios. This latter suggestion is one of a number that the French government has made for IFAD. The impending appointment of an Algerian president for the agency suggests that a new francophone initiative oo the North-South dialogue, centered on IFAD, may be in the cards. But the agency could still wither away. It is ironic that IFAD is only now seeing results from its projects. In the last few months generally favorable mid-term assessments of its work ernments, including those of Canada and West Germany. There is approval for IFAD's innovative approaches to raising food production in the poorest areas of the world.

These approaches include providing rural credit to landless farmers in Bangladesh, improving agricultural extensions in Kenya and developing the organizational framework for the diffusion of agricultural services to help raise revenues in Honduras.

Reagan's Goals, Not Age

Regarding the opinion column "In Fairness, Age Really Is an Issue" (Oct. 15) by James Reston;

As he is seen by a generation who fought World War II and went to college on the GI Bill, completed careers and are now retired. President Reagan does oot have to win a debate. The issue is goals, not age, Should he fall ill, we are satisfied that George Bush would continue progress toward Mr. Reagan's goals. The bottom line appears on page 9 (Oct. 15) under the heading "Rise Seen in Firms' Spending," which Rise states: "Spending for plant and equipment will continue to expand rapidly in the United States ...

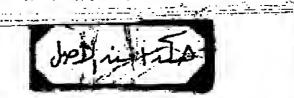

The economy is up. For the first time in many years the dollar is high in value, the president is respected at home and the United States is admired and envied abroad for political and economic stability. EDWIN BARROW. Glifadha, Greece.

Still a Popular President

Why has the International Herald Tribune been so anxious to spread across its front pages -- to the so-companiment of columnist and offtorial fantasy on inside pages - 10 ports on President Reagan's per-caved "hesitancy" and "fumbing" in his first debate with Walter Mondale, while it relegates to page 4 (Oct. 12) a report on a Washington Post-ABC poll showing a 61-10-36-percent favorable score for Mr. Reagan two days after that first debate?

The voters seem to prefer a doddering (?) Reagan to a glib Mondale. IM BRADLEY.

> While wondering Nature asks with Which Stubbs's labors are, and [Eight protesters from the group Anists for Peace picketed the gallery Tuesday because the sponsor of the show, the United Technologies Corp., produces parts for cruise missiles and other military equipment, The Associated Press reported.]

In one sense Stubbs's skill as an animal painter impeded the appre-ciation of his skills as landscape and portrait painter, even in his inferime. And it led posthumously either to his dismissal or, at best, to faint praise, such as "Stubbs the horse painter."

He had only himself to blame for this, since his first major work, and that on which his reputation was founded, was his masterly "Anatomy of the Horse." Though the theme looks uninspiring to modern eyes, it must not be forgotten that in mid-18th-century England the horse was the only form of transport. It was also, in its functions as ting mount and racer, one of the chief adjuncts of public amuse-

Before he began a three-year stint of dissecting and drawing dead horses for his "Anatomy," Subbs had studied human anatomy while earning his living as a portrait painter and teaching perspective to young drawing stu-dents. The evidence that a detailed knowledge of anatomy leads the skilled artist to better figurative painting, animal or human, is shown here in many of the 200 works on exhibit — for example, the 1763 large oil "Zebra" and the three pages of pencil drawings of "Marmaduke Tunstall's Monse Le-

The more exotic breeds seem to have been favored by Stubbs even in the painting of household pets and working dogs — the "White Poodle in a Punt," also from the Mellon collection; the "Spanish Dog Belonging to Mr. Cosway" (a fellow mainter) the "Norfolk or fellow painter); the "Norfolk or Water Spaniel"; and a classical portrayal of a "King Charles Spaniel" [1776].

Of course, no representative exbition of Stubbs's work could be without its complement of horse paintings, from the attractive but

Two especially good examples are "Soldiers of the 10th Light Dragoons" (1793) and "Hambletonian Rubbing Down" (1799).

The former was one of several paintings made by Stubbs for the Prince of Wales; it is now owned by the queen Theorem 1756, became his executors on his death in London on July 10, 1806.

Though the Dragoons, infantry soldiers occasionally given mounts for speed, look splendid, their military utility was already past at the time of the Napoleonic wars, when Stubbs painted them in their ceremonial uniforms. The 7th and 15th Light Dragoons were among the army initis defeated by Napoleon at the battle of Tourcoing on May 18, 1794.

The painting of Hambletonian is one of many racehorse portraits made by Stubbs from 1760 to the end of his life. At Chloe's, the potent impact of Karl Lagerfeld, who designed this collection for many successful years, is beginning to fade. This should give Paulin, his successor, a chance to shine.

Buyers Cautious at New York Auction of American Furniture

NEW YORK — New York buyers do not allow themselves to be carried away by uncontrolled enthusiasm these days. That could be verified last Saturday in one of the most solidly established areas of U.S. collecting, American furniture of the 18th century.

In a two-part sale at Christie's, a large number of pieces from various sources were auctioned in the morning, followed by a one-man collection in the afternoon. Togeth-er, the two parts rose to $2,290,000, prices. which made the auction the second

The masterpiece appeared in the most important sale of American first part of the auction. This is a solid mahogany highboy from Massachusetts made about 1750-70 that may have belonged to John Adams, "according to family tradition." It is the epitome of the American highboy, combining perfection of form and proportion, the highest standard of joinery and a wonderfully patinated wood surface. Il also retains its original brass fittings. The result was a rec-ord price for a highboy of $165,000 — three times Christie's high estimate - paid by Harold Sack, outbidding a private collector. The image of the afternoon collection, as projected by Christie's introduction to the catalog, could hardly have been more glamorous. The collecton was formed in New York from the mid-1920s through the early 1950s by C. Ray Franklin, a descendant of Benjamin Franklin who served on the staff of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Columbia University for 26 years. was referred to as "outstanding" y Albert Sack in a book about his ather, Israel Sack, the founder of the leading gallery dealing in

The catalog observed that Dr. Franklin, having retired to Ashe-ville, North Carolina, had sold the collection in early 1984 to the "current owner, who has consigned it in

In other words it now belonged to a dealer. John Newcomer of Keedysville, Maryland. In the view of most professionals, there are two possible readings to such a news em. One is that the dealer is trying to make a quick profit. The other is that being disappointed with his acquisitions, he is getting rid of em en hloc.

Neither assumption makes dealers anxious to play into their colleague's hands. They not only tend to be more cautions than usual but trusted dealers tell them than do European collectors.

To this unflattering background must be added the fact that, seen at close range, Franklin's collection of American furniture was less imcatalog and its ponderous intro-duction had suggested. "A mixed bag" is how Harold Sack, the present owner of Israel Sack Inc., characterized the two-part sale. When the market is in a buoyant mood, none of this matters too much. A collection put together by a man who loved his pieces will be seen through rose-colored spectacles. The best of the furniture will probably go through the roof, while medium-quality pieces will still do well. The Franklin name might

This occasionally also happened with lesser pieces, such as a Federal mahogany candle stand - a kind of small circular table resting on a baluster shaft rising from three "A fine and important Federal legs, which the French call a gueri-carved mahogany settee" attribut-

Buyers were not impressed by the provenance — the table is said to have belonged to Major General pressive than what the hardcover Henry Knox, "according to tradicatalog and its ponderous introduction had suggested. "A mixed disturbed by the top, which was bag" is how Harold Sack, the pre-loose, and by holes on the underside indicating that it had been re-set, although Ralph E. Carpenter, Christie's consultant, said that there was no doubt about its being the original part.

Most revealing of the coolness displayed by private collectors and dealers alike were the moderate prices offered for several of the most desirable lots. The next lot, a dressing bureau that is, a commode fitted with a mirror - in mahogany and bird'seye maple, was considered by specialists to be a real bargain at random touch inherited from the leaves are set horizontally. At $71,500, Illustrated in Vernon C. Stoneman's monograph on John and Thomas Seymour, the Boston cabinetmakers, it was on loan to the Los Angeles County Museum from 1941 to 1959, which should have greatly added to its glamour.

The proportion of unsold items in both parts of the auction was reduced on Monday when several of the pieces that had been bought in were negotiated privately by Christie's.

In sum, the sale can be considered a qualified success that holds a lesson. Money is undoubtedly available. But contrary to the impression with which market professionals, particularly auctioneers, were left after the $21-million sale of the Chatsworth drawings in London, this is not a time for reckless spending. High prices will be paid for important pieces, within the limits of reason.

The lesson is all the more significant because it was learned in a section of the market that is, by definition, almost exclusively American. Since American buyers are leading in the upper end of almost every area of the art market, it deserves to be carefully considered by auctioneers and dealers and by private vendors tempted to make a hard sell by imposing huge reserve prices.

Paris Fair: One-Man Shows the Rule

By Michael Gibson anal Herold Tribune

PARIS — Visitors to the contemporary art fair at the Grand Paleis should find assimilating the 2.000 works somewhat easier than usual because 131 of the 149 galleries have one-man shows.

There is the usual contingent of highly visible artists — the equivalent of the ramhunctious guest at the dinner party. But there are others who do not raise their voices to such a strident pitch and have something of exceptional value to lives in Belgium and is being displayed by the Philippe Guimint Gallery of Brussels.

His canvases are beautiful as pure painting, and they combine in an unexpected way the representainformel strain of recent years. Madlener is also a man of hroad eniture, and he has chosen to take Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde" as his theme in this series of very large paintings. They stand on their own as a purely visual invention, and the thematic connotation is in no way a crutch. Indeed, treated as it is, it adds an unusual and gratifying depth to these surprising works. No newcomer, Joseph Czapski, now in his late 80s, is not only a painter but also an eminent figure of the Polish emigration, a writer

a witness of history. A pacifist during World War I, he was a prisoner of the Russians during the last war until the alliances changed and be was entrusted with the mission of finding missing Polish officers in the Soviet camps.

Czapski, whose paintings are being shown hy the Jean Briance Gallery of Paris, must be viewed in the context of his remarkable life. His paintings, marked with both ex-pressionist intensity and humor, are like a visual diary in which he records the minute observations he makes from day to day - people in the subway, in theaters, in cafés. Czapski never was and never will be fashionable, but better than that, he is a man enamored of the spiritual adventure of life.

Joan Mitchell, at the Jean Fournier Gallery of Paris, is an outstanding American artist who has been living in France for many years and whose powerful work is rooted in the heritage of color left by Monet and the bold brush strokes of action painting.

Raymond Mason, a British artist and also a longtime Parisian (at Mariborough Gallery), is noted for his big, vigorous sculptures in an attractive populist vein. The largest work is a painted epoxy resin piece depicting grape pickers at work in southern France. The mood hovers between strong empathy, and humorous observation. Smaller works include a surprising little scene in new fashions that keep the market which a group of people is starkly lit by an enigmatic source.

Arman, a Frenchman who has made from the gutted remnants of French period furniture, flambed by the artist, cast in bronze and displayed under the monitory title "The Day After." The result is an ominously atmospheric tableau wivant expressing a familiar doomsday fantasy in somber tones. Jean Dubuffet is presenting recent scribble paintings in primary colors at the Jeanne Bucher Gallery of Paris. The smaller works appear disappointing but there is a very large painting in which the wall-to-wall network of random scrawls has undeniable force.

The younger and more boister-: ous artists all belong to the "new expressionist," wilde Malerei or socalled "bad-painting" trends as well as to the "cultural painting" movement, which has gained a foothold in Italy. Daniel Templon is showing a selection of works by such artists as Enzo Cucchi, Volker Tannert, Reiner Fetting and Anselm Kiefer.

The present FIAC, despite the youthful artists mentioned above, very much dominated, in terms of quality, by mature artists --- men and women over 45. Looking at their work one cannot help thinking that artists need time to ripen, Precocious genius is splendid, no doubt. It is also rare.

But the public (and the dealers) have too often decided that it was the artist's business to dream up

"Spontancity" is clearly a touchstone in much of 20th-century art, but il can easily turn to staleness if it does not become something more than an expression of naked ego. The best aspect of the current FIAC, which runs through Oct. 28, is this indication that ripeness is apparently being recognized and valued.

PARIS - "Money, money. money" is the straight answer to an outsider who might ask, "What is in a couture name?"

With one key qualification, that is: Sooner or later the original of the most brilliant couture names either retires or expires. Who takes over determines just how much money, and how long the "name" will continue to have an attraction.

Ever since Charles Frederick Worth dreamed up conture in the modern sense, public attachment to great names has proved frail and fickle. ### A SPECIAL REPORT ON FRENCH FASHION

Chic Families Rally for a Common Cause

By Jean Rafferty

PARIS - From October to May, when the weekend rolls around the Parisian jeunesse dorée shed their Levi 501 jeans and slip into silks and velvets, grey flannel suits and tuxedos. The rallye season is in full swing. Despite socialism and the social revolution of 1968, that distinctly French five-year social ritual, which encourages the children of the bonnes familles to meet one another, is still going

Starting at age 14 with a group of 12 to 20 youngsters who meet in the afternoons for bridge lessons, the rallye moves at age 15 to dancing lessons, then continues for three more years of increasingly grand soirces, as rallyes merge to form groups of up in 300. In Paris alone, almost 5,000 teen-agers are mem-bers of about 60 different rallyes, each organized by two or three mothers, often titled.

When one meets the same group of one's peers every two weeks and is subject to a stringent dress code, the problem of what to wear looms large. By catering exclusively to this up-market, in-between clientèle with her boutique "14/18," the former French fashion journalist Christiane Hélouis has effectively transformed her office into a bouplugged a market gap and seen her business grow in five years from a on retail. small office on Passy's rue Vital to two shops for girls, one in a small hotel particulier nearby, the other in old West German designer, Thom-the equally chic Avenue de la Bour- as Meyer, who "listens to donnais on the Left Bank.

yard of the Passy house, the crowd drawn from her mailing list of 4,800 rallye members overflowed the 250 gilt chairs and even buckled the iron house gates as models all rallye members - showed the taffeta and velvet strapless tops with straight skirts and the pulledsleeve fitted velvet spencers that are already this year's best sellers. The prototype trousers for the tuxedos had been stolen, so the boys, with admirable aplomb, modeled shirts, ties and brightly printed boxer shorts. Breeding will out. The idea for 14/18 started when Hélonis, who had a rallye-age daughter, did research for a story on the groups for a French newspaper. "My own daughter and all those I interviewed complained of finding nothing to wear," she re-called, "so I saw the opportunity." Initially, she planned to launch a

When Stylists Mix the Pieces, Clothes Become Fashion

By Barbara MacLaurin

PARIS - The French do not te a precise word for fashion eplist, even though they invented the concept 20 years ago: "A stylist is someone who feels hat a designer is "saying" and ige" comes across loud and clear. er on a runway or on the pages of a fashion magazine. It is the vists who pull together a look, ahance a mood with the right acessories, models and ambience.

eur, fashion reporter, muse, even fashion-crazy talented friend, and often styliste — all mean, more or its, stylist. This is probably why, in Paris at least, these experts with their vitally important eyes often get more fun and friendship from ar work than big money. A specific title could create a special prosion and with it fees almost as high as the ones in New York, where telented stylists have turned this knack into a thriving, competi-

Melka Treaton designed some hats to go with the clothes her friend Gerard Pipart designed in 1961. They were perfect because she understood exactly what he wanted. This gesture did not demonstrate a talent for millinery; what it did was show that the young part-time model and fashion reporter could emphasize a look. As a result she is credited with launching a new profession. "It was a joy to work with her because when we talked about accessories I knew she understood," Pipart recalled. Treaton has been called in to designer can perceive it.

Thierry Mugler would take the clothes off the hangers and 'do' his woman, walk like her, act like her. Azzedine Alala's women were all spruced-up, ready to go out for the evening — you could see them. "I don't like to criticize, but give some reassuring advice to someone starting out. If I'm looking at sketches i might say, That's great, do lots of it. Once a createur is mown, he doesn't need someone like me, because his woman is Treaton said she sees a show as a spectacle that has to be built up with sequences that harmonize strongly or contrast sharply. Either way they should make the designer's talent obvious. That, she said, is what being a stylist is all about." At the house of Saint Laurent everyone looks in the same direction as Yves, including Loulon de la Falaise, his assistant and muse. She also has a way of steing what is in the air outside, through her other friends, other life, which has helped about $300, continue to be classic best sellers. Didier Grumbach, president of

said at a Paris conference that a

Madison Avenue shop is considered a deal despite sky-high rents.
"A rent of $150 a square foot is considered moderate on Madison

Avenue," be said. "The industrialist or distributor might think

$50,000 is too high a rent, but it is the same cost as two pages in Vogue and a New York boutique is a reasonable entrance fee into the U.S. market."

Saint Laurent, Lanvin, Balmain, Givenchy and Ungaro have been joined in the last year by Kenzo, whose striking shop is always jammed; Agnès B, whose casual designs sell as well for children as their parents; and Sonia Rykiel, whose bourique has more than dou-

An instinct for fashion, she said, is "part of being alive. We could never have a system of other people coming in; our system is more es-tablished, more countre." But not rigid, she added. It is more like putting pieces of a puzzle together. First, decisions about accessories

There are always two interpretations: sport and evening, with looks that go everywhere and more extravagant looks for both groups. Sometimes we mix the two. We all clothes on a model. Yves depends very much on a woman wearing the clothes, to see what is flattering, Later we lay everything out on the floor to rework the combinations. It is like working with a live draw-ing, and everyone has their say, including the models. Someone will say, 'I'm tired of that'; if no one else agrees, the person doesn't die

Is one born with this creative knack? "I think one is born with an artistic temperatuent, an ear or an eye. It seems to me all httle girls are born with it more or less now, but when I was a child I didn't care about clothes, I hated dresses, loved rubber boots - I was very butch," Falaise said.

After deciding a theme for a fashion layout with her editor in chief, Cerf looks over the notes she has taken during about 30 official ready-to-wear collections as well as the collections as well as the smaller collections she sees throughout the year, which can number as many again. Then she calls in everything she thinks she might want, including all the accession. sories. This is a first try with the editor, a choice of models, makeup artists, heir stylists and photogra-

"We do everything from A to Z. You have to have fun doing it; it's like a game and you have to dare to play it, using lots of imagination." Beatrice Paul's "eye" came from working closely with Claude Montens, not from her genes, she said.
"We talk, and hats come out of conversations. Sometimes the choice of an accessory will come out of a sort of delirium. Claude thinks of a theme and then sets about preparing it. Last winter he started off with the idea of Schisparelli's violent rose color and designed his cocoon coats. Then we looked for 'the' shoes and jewelry to illustrate his theme. First he

No One Plays Dress-Up Better Than the Paris Party People

A cocktail party or black-tie dinner in Paris is a not-to-be-missed opportunity for those who feel a tingly rush of excitement at the mere prospect of witnessing some of the world's most competitive

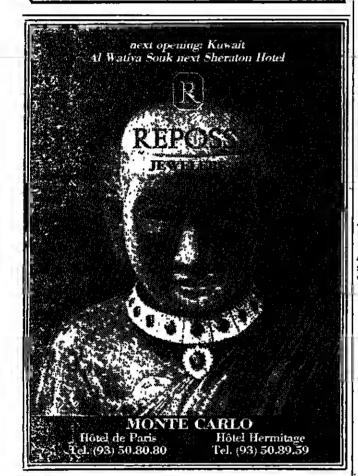

It is a game, in fact, played with panache by women who take great pleasure in dressing up. In the evening especially, when more time and care can be taken to create the desired effect — with meticalously applied makeup and perfect coiffure to complement the carefully selected designer dress — the results oever fail to prove that French women do indeed have their own special style.

But mostly what the best-dressed French woman has is a confident sense of herself, or a presence, which is, after all, what real style is about. And not incidentally she has also managed to master one of the more important plays in the game: the fine art of the grand entrance. No one does it better — or later

One result of the inexorable rise of the dollar is that although the affection for the American look is stronger than ever, the elements that put it together are more and more often made in Europe.

"Once we imported everything from the United States. Now we have cut our U.S. imports by 90 perceot," said Jean-Schastien Szwarc, president of Hemisphères, two Parisian stores that transformed mid-American fashions into top-drawer and top-priced

"We have discontinued most shoe lines such as Sebago, Footjoy, Johnson and Murphy and Hickey Freeman," Szwarc said. "We've only kept the Van's"—a multicolored sneaker at 490 francs - "because there is demand at any price." Hémisphères also kept "the Western boots, which start at 2,400 francs, the Levi 501s and 505s [450 and 490 francs] and the New Mexican square dance skirts —all things that cannot be found anywhere else but in the United States."

Chayla's Arrow shirts are all made in France. Their secondhand clothes shop, with a large collection of tweed sports coats, is, however, still furnished from the United States, by customer demand, and despite a cheaper French copy — Liberto jeans, at 260 francs — the Levi's 501 is by far the overall best seller. But as Chayla reveals, "only 10 percent of the 501s we sell are made in the United States. The rest are made with American denim by Levi in France." The French-made ones are 50 francs cheaper at 330

"For a purist, it's not the same," admits Willy Mitz, owner of four "America" bounques in Paris. "Arrow, Lee, Wrangler, Bluebell — they're all made in France." # The French Savings Sector: A Private Touch of Magic

By GUY MARTY

ARIS - French economic experts have often admired the exploits of Anglo-Saxon financial magicians, but now they too have pulled a rabbit out of the hat. This fastbreeding French product called the Société Civile de Placement Immobilier, or private real-estate investment company, has made its mark and accumulated considerable assets.

In general the French like to invest in real estate, but from the viewpoint of the economy, French businesses also need these funds. With impressive ease, however, the SCPIs have managed to accommodate both interests, without involving the Paris Bourse. Their technique is simple. They obtain capital directly from private investors who buy shares, and then use these funds to buy buildings to rent to commercial enterprises.

The system is based on multiple private ownership of specific items of real estate and each SCPI looks after its own affairs regarding the occasion-al buying or selling of share lots by members or new subscribers. Created in the 1960s, the SCPIs were rocked by several financial scandals early on. In 1970 a law was passed to put them under the wing of the Commission des Opérations de Bourse — the French equivalent of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commision - because of their role in attracting savings from the public.

ion—because of their role in attracting savings from the public.

They have now become respected financial institutions. Each of the French banks is now proud to have its own SCPI, which now total 80 with overall capital assets of about $1.5 billion.

In cases where prices of shares are simply reappraised periodically by the individual SCPI administrators, and are then used at those levels in any negotiation, this type of venture doesn't escape the customary behavior of a financial market.

SCPIs that possess no wide commercialization network — mostly non-bank-affiliated — tend to slightly undervalue their share lots to attract new subscribers. Bank-affiliated SCPIs. however, lean toward more dynamic re-evaluations because their main concern is to give their clients healthy capital increments. Thus, the SCPI system allows investors to choose between higher quarterly revenue yields or higher capital values.

Py 1972 the Commission des Opérations de Bourse had practically completed its task of potting the SCPIs in order. Since then, virtually all have shown higher rates of return than annual inflation levels, taking into account both the reassessment of share values and quarterly revenue-yield distribution. For most of these companies the maximum waiting period for sales of share lots is around three months.

The SCPIs rates to the neutral demand in France for real-

The SCPIs cater to the natural demand in France for real-estate investment but avoid the usual thorus of investors having to be involved in daily management, problems with tenants and liquidity. They also provide satisfactory long-term savings that are more stable than funds tied up in fluctuating financial

At the same time, the system benefits companies that can rent their factories or offices and use their own funds for investment and expansion. Indeed, several European countries are showing interest in the SCPI system.

The nurturing of this real-estate cuckoo in the financial nest has caused a few gray feathers for the Commission des Opéra-tions de Bourse. But the health of savings and their efficient channeling into the economy are well worth some sacrifice.

Car Firms In France 'In Crisis'

By Axel Krause sternational Herald Tribuna

PARIS - A report requested by the government says the French automobile industry is "in crisis" and recommends substantial lay-oils, new government-backed fi-nancing and a restructuring of French antomaker operations along Japanese lines.

along Japanese lines.

The report, excerpts of which were made available Friday, was written by François Dalle, chairman of L'Oréal, France's largest commetics company, and it will be presented formally next Thursday to a national committee on industrial properties. try policy.

The committee, headed by Mr. Dalle and comprised of industry, union and government representa-tives, was established earlier this year by Laurent Fabius, when he was minister of industry before bewas minister of industry better be-ing named prime minister. The committee will examine other in-dustries later this year, including the telephone and chemical sectors.

The report says that domestic sales and profits of French automakers since 1979 have declined steadily - a sharp contrast to improving sales, productivity and fi-nancial performance of most competitors in Western Europe, Japan and the United States.

As an example, the report says that the state-owned Renault and privately owned Citroen, require 8,000 workers to assemble 1,200 vehicles per day, while Italy's Fiat uses 6,000 and Japanese automakers need 4,000.

To reverse the trend, the report calls on French automakers to con-tinue cutting back employment lev-els, to about 160,000 persons in 1988 from last year's level of 230,000 persons; to increase sub-stantially their investments; to pro-duce one new model a year, and to copy the Japanese model of organization and production."

At the same time, the govern-ment should provide the industry with a minimum of about 6 billion francs ($624 million) in new, low-interest loans to help finance ex-pansion in 1985 and 1986, the re-

Sir Richard: Building a Better Model

By Eric N. Berg

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Building models was always a passion for Sir Richard Stone. As a child in London, he would carve detailed, balsa-wood miniatures of trains and airplanes. Even today, at 71, Sir Richard recalls that whitling the toys was the greatest joy of his youth, offering deep insight into the world around him.

So, it is fitting that, when the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences announced Thursday that it had chosen Sir Richard, a retired Cambridge Uni-versity professor, as the 1984 winner of the Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science, it was for making splendid models.

True, the award was for a wholly different type of modeling: abstract economic models consist of equations rather than the carving of his youth Yet those who know this lanky, white haired schol-ar say that all his life Sir Richard has been in-trigued by likenesses that help him understand complex phenomena.

Now. Sir Richard's work devising complex economic models — in particular, his path-breaking role in designing accounting systems that countries can use to track economic activity — has won him the Nobel award.

"One always has a sort of vague idea" that one is being considered, Sir Richard said Thursday. "But I was very surprised."

Friends and professional colleagues say that Sir Richard would be among the last to consider himself in the Nobel category. They describe the professor as a sky, bookish man—a scholar given to boar time tweed included. to bow nes, tweed jackets and serving society

"He has never been impressed by the weight of his accomplishments," said George Jaszi, the director of the Bureau of Economic Analysis at the U.S. Commerce Department and a friend of Sir Richard's since the 1940s.

Yet, those accomplishments have been substantial. Some say that Sir Richard's work involving accounting for economic activity places him in the group of the most prominent recent economic thinkers, including John Maynard Keynes and Pani A. Samuelson

John Richard Nicholas Stone was born in London on Aug. 13, 1913. The son of a judge, he studied law upon enrolling at Cambridge but eventually decided on a career in economics and studied under Keynes. After receiving a baccalaureate degree in that field in 1935, he took a job writing an economic newsletter for a London stock brokerage firm. # Talks Set on Tie Between Krupp, Klöckner Units

By Warren Gerler nal Herald Technic

FRANKFURT - The supervisory boards of Krupp Stahl AG and Klöckner-Werke AG may approve a merger of the companies' steel divisions at meetings Wednes-day, a high-ranking source at Krupp said Friday. Such a merger would create West Germany's sec-ond-largest steel group behind

The merger, industry sources said, would give Krupp 35 percent and Klöckner 30 percent of a new company. The remaining 35 per-cent would go to Australia's CRA Ltd., a large raw-materials group that has a history of cooperation with Klöckner.

Company spokesmen declined to comment on whether Krupp or Klöckner had plans to merge their steel operations

A member of Krupp's supervisory board, who asked not to be named, said the board would meet to discuss the issue Wednesday. A spokesman at Klöckner was reported by Reuters to have said that company's supervisory board would also meet Wednesday. The meetings would be separate and would not involve direct talks between executives of the companies.

Production Cuts Are Threatened by OPEC Members

en by the cartel to cut production, we are in big trouble," Philip K.
Verleger Jr., an oil consultant based in Washington, told a gathering of oil executives Friday.

OPEC's latest crisis accounts OPEC's latest crisis erupted Monday, when Norway, which is not a member of the group, announced a cut of about $1.50 a barrel in its oil prices. Britain, a much bigger non-OPEC producer, quickly responded with a cut of $1.35. Late Thursday, Nigeria, an OPEC member, chopped its prices by $2 a barrel. The sequence was similar to the one that forced OPEC in March 1983 to cut its reference price to $29 a barrel from $33. Lower OPEC production kept prices near official levels for months, but the structure has finally succumbed to oversupply from both OPEC and non-OPEC producers as well as a proliferation of disguised dis-

prices partly because OPEC's highquality light crudes, such as those produced by Nigeria, the United Arab Emirates and Indonesia, are overpriced in relation to heavy crudes. Many refineries have been upgraded in recent years to process the heavier crudes into gasoline and other high-value products. That increased demand for heavy

To overcome the problem, some analysts say, OPEC might cut the price of its reference crude, Saudi light, to around $27 a barrel and leave the heavier grades unchanged at around $26. Any such change would involve tricky negoniations.

A former top OPEC official, who did not want to be identified, said the group could decide to leave official prices unchanged, while let-ting its members offer the dis-counts needed to find customers. When demand revives, he said, it would be easier to climinate the unofficial discounts than to agree on a new official pricing structure. In any case, lower prices alone ing pressure to a gintted oil market. Challenge is to regain credibility. In addition, Saudi Arabia recently "We're going to learn a lot about changed the mix of crude it sells to this cartel in the next 10 days," Mr. do much for demand," Mr. Verleger predicted. What is needed, he analysts say amounted to a disfind ont if it still works." and other analysts say, is lower production.

"They've got to provide the market with shock therapy, which can only be done by cutting production," said Mehdi Varzi, an analyst at the London stockbrokerage of Grieveson, Grant & Co. He said OPEC should cut its output for the next couple of months to, say, 15 million barrels a day from the cur-rent level of around 18 million. Such a cutback would create a

The new figures showed the economy expanded at a smaller rate than any quarter since the end of 1982. An earlier "flash" estimate of third-quarter GNP projected a 3.6 increase.

Another part of the report, the "implicit price deflator," showed a 3.6-percent inflation rate for the economy in the third quarter, up a bit said Friday a one-time gain from a tax law change produced a sharp increase in fiscal second-quarter profit compared with a year earlier.

The computer maker, which also has interests in farm equipment and acrospace and military electronics, said net income tripled to $99.5 million, or $1.80 a share, in the quarter ended Sept. 30 from $31.1 million, or 60 cents a share, a year carlier

The latest earnings included a $64 million credit from a change in tax law this year. The change, affeeting some companies with ex-port operations, forgives taxes on previously tax-deferred earnings of export units. As a result, companies such as Sperry that had to set up reserves to pay for potential future tax liabilities from their export units can now add those reserves to earnings.

Canada Strike Prompts U.S. Layoffs at GM

United Press International DETROIT - General Motors Corp. said Friday that it is laying off 5,500 workers at its Orion the strike. GM said that about 5,500 workers would be laid off beginning Monday, at plants in Detroit, Orion Township, Flint, Lansing, and Ypsilanti, Michigan; Kansas City and Wentzville, Missouri; Lordstown, Ohio, and Wilmington, Delaware. Those plants use parts produced in Canada.

In Toronto Friday, representatives of the United Auto Workers and GM Canada met for two hours but failed to reach agreement. The union went on strike on Wednesday, after talks had failed to produce agreement on a new contract. The walkout involves 36,000 workers at 13 GM plants. The session, called by GM Cana-da's chief negotiator, Rod Andrew. ended abruptly when he stormed Shipments in the third quarter

■ Losses From U.S. Strike

Losses from the partial strike last month will be "almost impossible" to recover in the fourth quarter, Remers quoted the chairman of General Motors Corp., Roger B. Smith, as saying Friday in Detroit.

Mr. Smith, speaking at the sign-ing of a contract with the UAW, said GM is already operating near capacity.

Mr. Smith said the UAW's par-tial strike last month had caused a "negative impact" on GM's thirdquarter earnings. But, he said, the company will still report a profit for the quarter.

MEMORY is a storeroom for unneeded things, an attic where dusty baskets crammed full of old shoes are kept until they are eventually thrown out along with suitcases with brokeo handles, odd rags, umbrellas, bits of glassware, albums, pieces of wire, a solitary glove and dust, dust, the thick, limp dust of time.

So reflects Pavel Evgrafovich Letunov, an aged widower living with his family in a dacha in a Moscow suburb during the hot summer of 1973. In the distance, the dry forests are allame, while around him, his children and their oeighbors are plotting against each other for possession of a vacated dacha in their Stormy Petrel Cooperative.

His family nags at him to use his status as a veteran of the civil war that followed the 1917 Russian revolutioo to obtain the dacha, but the old man is immersed in memories and dreams that have been awakened by a letter from Asya, whom he who fought on the Red side during the civil war but ran afoul of the Bolsheviks, and a half-century later, Pavel Evgrafovich is still struggling to come to terms with his small part in Migulin's downfall. The old man muses over the bloody vendettas that were carried oo behind the lines: "Black and white, obscurantists and angels. And oo one in between.

Before his death in 1981, in his mid-50s, Yuri Trifonov had earned a reputation as a major Soviet writer on the basis of several novellas. c power struggles and the rough-and-ready justice. The character of Migulin takes on heroic propor-tions as the defender of revolutionary ideals against the hardening Bolshevik repression. "How does someone prove he's one of us," a Red soldier asks, and there is no easy answer. Suspicion quickly becomes conviction.

Pavel Evgrafovich remembers explaining to Asya's distraught mother, "So long as the enemies remain, the revolution will continue." And he remembers her reply: "But you'll always have ene-mies." A prophetic soul.

The oovel falters about midway, when it moves into the present with a couple of chapters about the machinations of the rivals for the cootested dacha. We have hardly gotten to know the members of the Letunov family, when these incidental figures push them offstage. It's a confusing diversion.

But then Trifooov returns to the old man's fitful memories of the civil war, when everything in Russia was "churned up, everything swept away, gone," and the book regains its strength. He presents the frenzy of the time io quick flashes - wild battles, barrages of rumors, noisy rallies, incoherent speeches, endless arguments over first principles, personal grudges turning into accusations of treason, danger

Past and present come together powerfully in a brief scene when some local officials trudge round to shoot stray dogs, including ooe that Pavel Evgra-fovich has adopted. "Savage is the year," the old man thinks back to 1918. "Savage is the year, savage the hour over Russia. Like lava it flows, that savage time, submerging and burying in its fire. And in that fiery womb new and fantastic things are born."

Like all significant works about the past, this need is about the present. novel is about the present.

The Tigers never were seriously challenged and went on to finish with a 104-58 record in winning their first Eastern Division title

Anderson became the first manager to win world championships in both leagues when his Tigers swept the Royals in the playoffs and then beat San Diego in five games in the World Series. Anderson guided the Cincinnati Reds of the National League to world titles in 1975 and 1976.

The Tigers, second in the East in 1983, acquired relief pitcher Willie Hernandez from Philadelphia during spring training, and that trade seemed to be the last piece missing from Anderson's puzzle.

Shortstop Alan Trammell, right helder Kirk Gibson and catcher Lance Parrish numed in sparkling seasons, as did starting pitchers Jack Morris, Dan Petry and Milt Wilcox, along with Hernandez and fellow reliever Aurelio Lopez.

Anderson, 50, was in his sixth year with the Tigers.

After an undistinguished playing career, he managed in the minors for four years before becoming coa-ch of the San Diego Padres in 1969. He was added to the California Angel coaching staff that October but within days was named manager of Cincinnati. He took the Reds to the pennant in 1970.

Anderson was fired by Cincinnati after the 1978 season, and then took over the Tigers.

Howser's Royals began the season without their two offensive sparkplugs, leadoff batter Willie Wilson, serving a suspension for cocaine use, and third baseman George Brett, who was injured.

Kansas City relied on a young pitching staff, overcame injuries and inconsistency and finally jelled into a solid team that went 84-78 and won its first division crown since 1980.

Gardner's Twins were not given much of a chance prior to the season. But the young team played well all year and finished tied for

NEW YORK - Marvelous Marvin Hagler held up his right hand. "This is 'K." he said. He held up his left hand: "O."

On Thursday, he was more moderate. "No disrespect against women," he said, "except we feel they should be outnumbered." To Arum's delight, the gimmick

Italian Soccer Bribe Case Winds Down

ROME (UPI) - The chief investigator of allegations that bribery was involved in Italy's 1-1 draw with Cameroon in the first round of soccer's 1982 World Cup recommended Friday that the case be dismissed to the legal archives.

Aides said Francesco Palma of the state prosecution office asked the presiding magistrate to shelve the proceedings because his interrogation of witnesses had produced oo evidence to support the allegations. Should the judge accept the recommendation, the case would in effect be closed as far as Italian law is concerned unless new evidence turns up to justify its being reopened.

The allegation that some Cameroon players took money to guarantee the tie that enabled Italy to advance (Italy eventually won the cup) appeared last month in the weekly magazines Epoca and L'Espresso. It was made by a free-lance journalist, Roberto Chiodi, who is also a consultant for a sporting goods firm. Chiodi, national coach Enzo Bearzot and 1982 captain Dino Zoff were questioned by Palma on Thursday.

Mark McEnroe: Man in Middle

New York Times Service

Not the family there is his older brother, John, the tennis chamiltonian of the family there is his older brother, John, the tennis chamiltonian of the family of th pion. On the other end is his younger brother, Patrick, the junior tennis champion. And in the middle is Mark McEnroe, a fairly decent tennis player, but, as he puts it, "terrible in my family."

Some would say that the worst place to be born is in the middle of a threesome, especially when both of your siblings are among the best in the world at what they do. But don't feel sorry for Mark McEnroe: He prefers being the man in the middle. "I wouldn't want to be in any other position," he said the other day at World Tennis, the maga-zine in whose midtown Manhattan offices be has worked since August as an assistant editor. "You're not the oldest, so you doo't get your parents' wrath or their high expectations, and you're not the youngest, so they don't treat you like a baby."

"And at the same time," he went oo with a wry grin, "you can always use being in the middle as an excuse if you ever flop."

Mark. 22, is, like his older brother, a hlunt-speaking young man with an impish sense of humor. He was a June graduate of Stanford University, where he was a B-plus student in political science and played on the tennis team for a year. His hrother John, 25, attended the same university for a year, then left to play tennis, and his brother Patrick, 18, is a freshman there this fall.

Husky and 6 feet 3 inches tall (1.87 meters), Mark is 3 to 4 inches taller than his hrothers. While they are blond and blue-eyed, he has dark hair and brown eyes. "My brothers are more of a pair than I am," he said. As his mother, Kay, sees it. Mark is "pretty, the handsomest son," and was the cutest haby you ever saw."

Mark said that what he did at World Tennis was "some writing, some editing and a lot of busy-work." Another of Mark's duties is writing an advice column called "Manners by McEnroe."

since the McEnroe name has more often been associated with bad tennis manners than with good ones, Mark leaned back in his chair and said: "I'm sure that came across the editors minds. I agree that it's funny, and obviously the title was incongruous, given what everyone thinks about my hrother's public image."

He said that his column did not deal with serious tennis issues hut with questions that ordinary players might ask, such as Should you kiss your mixeddoubles partner after a match?" and "Should you wear tennis clothes to the U.S. Open?" He said that he wrote most of the questions and all the answers himself.

One of his favorite questions, he said, was: "My wife wants to take me to a women's termis match and I think it's boring. What should I do?" The reply was that the questioner should stay home and do his tax returns or catch up on his correspon-

"I personally don't find women's tennis too entertaining," McEnroe said, "and I was hoping to get a few irate letters from en." Pause. Devilish grin. "I only got one."

Asked about his relationships with his hrothers when they were growing up in New York, he said be thought they were "as normal as in any family of three boys."

We fought all the time, and we would wrestle, and my mother would always be screaming at us to shut up," he said. "You know, the usual things that anyone would find. Our whole family is expressive. We shout rather than get quiet. We don't stomp off and slam doors. We yell at each other, That's certainly how my father is and how we've always been."

McEnroe said that his parents had given all the boys equal time and that a major reason he had oot had problems with John's tennis triumphs was that John is

"I'm sure it would have been different," he said, "if I had been the oldest and John had been as good as he is and had been youn- was a great reader and writer and ger than me." Patrick's successes, he said, do not bother him: "I still think of him as my little brother."

When asked how he felt whenever his older brother had a temper tantrum on the tennis court, he said: "I probably have a worse temper than my brother. I'm the only McEnroe ever to be pulled off a court in the middle of a match." It occurred, he said, when he was a sophomore at a boarding school in Connecticut.

"I won the first set and was losing the second," he said, "so I started screaming at myself, loud, I didn't throw any rackets or yell at my opponent. The coach warned me a few times, and then when I lost a game to go behind, 2-4, I shouted 'Oh, you stink!' at myself or something like that, and the coach said, "That's it!" Kay McEriroe said that a major difference between Mark and her two other sons was that Mark wrote the great American novel.
